Avalanche

Winter sports can be fun, stimulating, and healthful—and they can be dangerous. The difference is often due to carelessness, but the greatest single danger is from avalanches.

To guard against carelessness and to insure the safety of the Forest visitor, the Forest Service has Snow Rangers on duty at many heavily used ski areas. These are regular Forest Rangers, handpicked for their skiing ability and thoroughly trained to recognize avalanches in the making and to bring them down in controlled slides.

TRAVELING IN AVALANCHE TERRAIN

Never travel alone.

Never expose more than one man at a time to avalanche danger.

Stay off avalanche paths. The safest route around an avalanche path is over the top by way of the ridges. The next safest route is along the valley floor. The most dangerous route is on the avalanche path.

The highest danger exists during or immediately after heavy snowfalls.

Do not assume a slope is safe just because it did not slide when the first man crossed it.

Ski safely

The National Ski Patrol System works hand in hand with the Forest Service on the slopes. Patrol men mark hazards on the slopes and trails, help skiers having trouble on the hills, and reform the "schussboomer" who careens down the hill out of control. The men and women of the Ski Patrols are trained in winter first aid and care of the injured. At the end of the day they make a final sweep of all ski runs to see that no one is left out overnight.

Safety on the slope, however, really depends on the skier. Each owes it to himself and his fellow sportsmen to ski under control at all times and to notify the Ski Patrol of accidents.

IT'S JUST COMMON SENSE TO —

Use proper ski equipment and keep it in good shape. Make sure you are in good physical condition. Wear clothes that are warm, windproof, and free of frills that might become caught in towlines. Ski only on slopes where you can keep in control. Heed avalanche signs and warnings of snow conditions. Ski with someone if you leave the beaten path, and Stop skiing when tired.

AND IT'S JUST COMMON COURTESY TO —

Help pack the slope. Fill in your "sitzmarks". Keep your skis on when climbing slopes. Give the slow skier the right-of-way. Move to the side of slope or trail, clear of downhill traffic, to rest or talk, and Cooperate with the Ski Patrol.
